I think it is pretty much pointless to give my feed back or suggestions. As I said before the predetermined outcome will prevail, maybe with a few minor changes.

Listening to presentations that agree with the preferences of those leading the discussion and creating the agenda without having a meaningful discussion and debate about what should be said doesn't address reality; surveys and comments are inadequate. There may be some validity in other perspectives, but they seem to be ignored or at least not given a chance to be examined.

I know that if I go on, no one will ask for my reasons or why I hold a point of view. My comments will just be put in a box and added to a percentage that seems to agree with some others. I know that I am in the minority, so I will end with this from James Madison:

There is no maxim, in my opinion, which is more liable to be misapplied, and which, therefore, more needs elucidation, than the current one, that the interest of the majority is the political standard of right and wrong.
